Merry Christmas: December 2013

Dear Darla,

I am happy to report that I am completely decorated, all presents wrapped or in UPS, holiday outfits picked out, sitters booked for holiday parties, and web pages updated with holiday themes.

Not quite.

Find out where I am spending my time, and why it might matter to you (below).

I'm looking forward to seeing you at one of the events early next year. Here are some dates to keep in mind.

- January 11- Chester County Library at 10 am
- January 13- Upper Merion Library at 7 pm
- January 22- Upper Dublin Library at 7 pm

My newsletter readers are on my "nice" list, for sure. I really, really appreciate that you open your email and give me 2 minutes a month. I try very hard to make it worth your while. Hopefully, several times a year you think about ways that we've saved you money, saved time, made you smile, or helped you through a rough patch. My company mission is to help you find peace. The peace of the season. Peace in your home. Peace inside your head. Financial peace. Yes, and we move your stuff around, too. Guideposts Magazine is one of my favorite sources of encouragement, and I'd love

'Tis the Season

I'm not trying to rush the season or anything. I hope that you truly enjoy your decor, the abundance of home baked goodies, the excuses to get together with dear friends.

But in just a few days, it's going to be January.

I'm planning 31 days of 30-minute organizing projects. There should be a special prize for anyone who completes all 31, but even if you do just one or two, they might be game-changers for you. Here's a sneak peak at just some of the categories:

Storing holiday decor
Email
Job hunting
Better lists
Pictures
Finances
Filing
Party
Magazines
More!

Be sure to click to subscribe to my blog , so you'll get each daily email. I can't wait to hear what 30-minute projects you tackle, and how much you get accomplished!

Last Minute Gift Idea:

Your mom called, & said she doesn't want more stuff for Christmas, but she wants her photos organized.
