Get Organized Month in January

Hard to believe. My counters are covered and there is a mess of toys around, but we've had a wonderful holiday season, so I don't care about any of the craziness. It'll all get organized in one day.

National Association of Professional Organizers

Here are my secrets:

- 1: Chose people over stuff every time.
- 2: Since we are "organized", holiday clean-up is easy. One day will be plenty of time to put our house back together.
3. Everyone helps. Even though the kiddos are only 4 and 6, they both help out. I don't have to do it all alone.

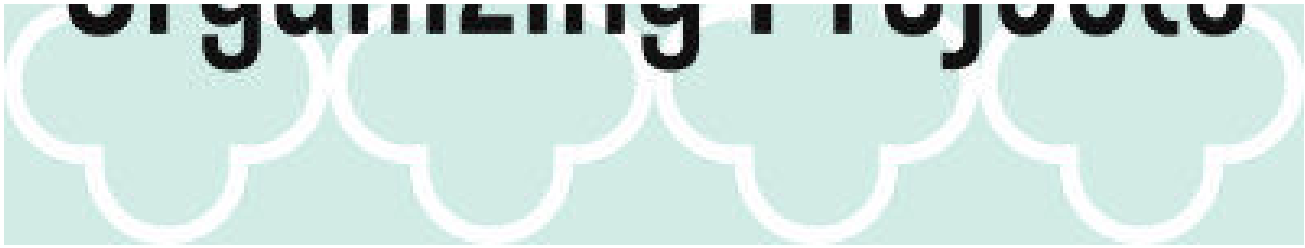

Which is good, because January is a busy month here. See below for a new series for you. And check out the events listed above. I'll be sharing more inspiration (and goodies!) in person at these free presentations, where I'll be able to answers your questions in real time.

By the way, I've totally redesigned the newsletter to make it easier to see on your computer and your phone or mobile device. I'd love to hear if it actually makes it easier for you to read. Thanks for your feedback (click here).

If you are already as organized as you want to be, then come get design inspiration at the Philadelphia Home Show. I have pairs of tickets available for the asking. Please contact me with your physical address, or use this discounted ticket code when free tix run out.

Of course, what I really love to do is help you personally. If you are ready to start your own organizing or decorating project with my help, please call 856-905-3202 (preferred) or 610-688-8595 or email to get started. Ready. Set. GO!

Need time to get organized? Need a plan? Need encouragement? I've got you covered with 31 organizing projects that will absolutely get you organized. Do one a day, or choose your target areas. (Unlike doing sit ups, you can absolutely lose weight in just one area!) I'm not afraid to take on the tough topics in these bite sizes: home, email, finances, photos, and more.
