Home Shows & SnowDrops Prove Spring is Here

I'm always surprised by what people know about me. I forget those little details shared online or in a class. I don't like sandwiches unless they are warm and made in front of me. I once met the CEO of AT&T. Blue and yellow is always an appropriate color combination. Sugar, mostly in the form of sweet and sour candies, is my nemesis. Bulletin boards have a gravitational force that attract me in every coffee shop and public place. Yes, I have really gone to Paris for the weekend, back when that was possible without kids. I am an email addict. Snowdrops in my yard make my heart sing.

But enough about me. Getting to know you, my clients, is the most interesting thing about my work. Just this weekend I helped a young family with color for their home. The mom said that in less than an hour, we solved a decorating dilemma that has been troubling them for over two years. I also helped a dear soul unpack keepsakes from her dad's house. He's been gone for a year, and being able to enjoy the memories with her was precious. And I got to help organize a basement! Now she can get to all of her hobbies and get some repairs done. Weird, I know, but how cool is it to make such a big difference in just a few hours.

Not everyone wants an organizer, even if they struggle with "stuff-itis." Not everyone can afford a one-on-one session. But I love helping just the same. We answer a lot of questions over on the Facebook page and other social media (find where down at the bottom of this newsletter). And we can meet up in places like the Spring Home Show this coming Sunday.

One of the things I like to do at the home shows (and everywhere) is help with your organizing and decorating questions. Snap a few pics on your smartphone, and let's put our heads together on how to solve your dilemma. Or just get some ideas on where to start at with my best organizing tips. I hope to see you there.

You don't need a four leaf clover to win my giveaways this Sunday. Happy St. Paddy's Day.
