Better Late Than...

June apparently was busier than I realized. Has that ever happened to you? That is totally why you are getting a June newsletter on July 3.

Just keeping it real.

We've finally got our summer routine nailed, at least for the next 4 weeks, when everything will change again. As I tell my growing girls, if everything stayed the same, what fun would that be?

One change that I'm loving is our new summer routine. The girls are doing at least 3 chores each day in their pursuit to have me buy them a new book each week. And these aren't wimpy chores like make your bed. Nooo, these are heavy elbow-grease chores like sweeping the front porch, vacuuming out the car, cleaning baseboards and doing extra lawn work. I can't tell you how hard it is not burst out in a grin when I hear, "Mom, can I wash the windows?" You may think this sounds like no fun, but to them, chores are a chance to create, solve problems, and even compete with each other. You can set up your own Do Chores/Earn Books incentive here. It's the cheapest investment you might make in their lifetime education.

If you were bummed about missing our next fun DIY workshop at Habitat for Humanity Norristown, you're in luck. We've rescheduled this event from it's earlier date so more of you could join in on Saturday, July 29. We'll each be creating a set of personalized photo coasters for yourself or to get you started on holiday gift giving. PLUS with registration you'll receive a 30% of coupon to use at the Habitat for Humanity ReStore. Register right now for this DIY Coaster Workshop, and we'll see you there!

I was going to send a 4th of July tips, but I decided to look forward to the next holiday, July 11, which Amazon is calling Prime Day. It's kind of like Black Friday in the summer. I love Amazon Prime a little for shopping, more for quality TV and movies worth watching, and even more for free and affordable books. Read how Amazon can be a great organizing tool, and sign up for Prime if it's right for you.
