You Have Time

Tomorrow I'll publish an article reviewing the book 168 Hours. The gist of it is that we all have the same 168 hours each week. Folks who are the happiest tend to be those who align how they spend their hours with their values.

Sure, we all waste time occasionally. I've been known to waste an entire day reading. Gasp! But there's one single thing that I do (as do many other successful people) to use their time best...

Use a planner to mark commitments for future dates, whether those commitments are to others or to yourself.

Are you looking to make your 168 hours more meaningful this month? Sign up to volunteer with Habitat for Humanity and my team on September 16 when we Rock the Block.

Or maybe you've always felt a little guilt about not finishing the baby book, or letting your photos get so disorganized. On September 23, you are invited to a Save Your Photos event at my office in Wayne. We'll be answering your questions about photos on phones, laptops, tablets, slides, films and videos. Touch and feel our high quality printed books. We'll even scan up to 50 photos free for you. All you need to do is register here for this free Save Your Photos event. What's that, you say? Need mimosas? Can do! Every day we hear stories of families losing their photos to theft, loss, fire and floods. Don't let it happen to you.

Or make a difference by working on-site Habitat at our team build workday on October 27 in the Norristown area. Please click here to join.

Whether you can make all or none of these events, you still have 168 hours this week, and every week this month. Can you schedule out something that will make a difference for you? Some ideas:

Schedule lunch with a friend.

Schedule a checkup with a doctor.
Schedule a day to clear out your closet for fall.
Schedule a night out at a live music venue.

Or maybe you really want to get organized. Yay! We have a few September appointments open, and we'll donate a portion of every single appointment this month to Habitat for Humanity's local efforts. So getting organized really will mean something more in September. Don't waste a minute booking your appointment.

Pop over to facebook and shout out what you'll refocus your 168 hours on.
