Consider This

A current TV ad shows a commuter with a water bottle in her car with a tag line, "45 minutes in the car; a thousand years in a landfill." An email from Rubbermaid states that according to the Container Recycling Institute, an estimated 86% of plastic water bottles go unrecycled every year in America. Refill a reusable bottle and feel good in more ways than one.

Go Green...Start at Home

It seems the only retailer I know who hasn't gone green is my gas station! Everything has an earth-friendly angle these days. That's why I am so excited to offer a very special service to YOU!

Professional Appraiser Katherine Linzey will offer an appraising event at my home on June 6. The event is by invitation only, and I'd love to see you there. Organizing and decorating is so much easier if you know the value of your stuff, what's really worth keeping, and what is just for fun.

Get Organized, Go Green

1. Time for change. Low impact materials, like bamboo containers and Sherwin Williams low volatile organic compound (VOC) paints including Duration, are easy to use, better for people, and earth friendly. That worth an extra $5/gallon in my book.
2. Storage doesn't have to mean using boring plastic bins. Bamboo comes in so many attractive storage containers. Cardboard is appropriate for so many storage tasks, and can be recycled. Even canvas is a great storage material sometimes.
3. Restore. When we moved, I couldn't bear to buy a new sofa and see the old one go to a landfill. I commissioned a fresh new slipcover. Not only did I save money, I also saved manufacturing and delivery resources.
4. Reclaim value. I arranged for the old matching loveseat to be donated to a local charity. I will get a tax deduction, and this useable piece in good condition will literally go to a good home.
5. If you are curious about your antiques, unusual items or garage sale treasures, request your invitation to our Appraisal Event on June 6. Perhaps those items are worth nothing and you can move on. Or maybe they really can fund Junior's college education!

Simple Tip: Donations to a charity benefit everyone if they are in good condition and working order.
