Getting It Together: March 2013

Dear Darla, ,

We are a people of stories. What's yours? Do you think in lines of text? Probably not. You probably think more in flashes of images, photos, and shared vignettes, you know, those stories that you and your BFF tell over and over about that thing that happened that one time way back when.

In the last generation or so, we've flipped from a people who struggle to capture our stories to a people who struggle to edit our story into meaningful bits that tell the essence of our history. The NY Times wrote about this on March 13, in "Now at Least You Can Be Virtually Immortal."

But who has the time? That's where we come in. Call us to tell your story, with pictures, childhood masterpieces, video, and whatever treasures you hold dear.

And you thought organizers wanted you to throw stuff out. Nope. What we do is help you enjoy and cherish what you truly love. Because no one ever said, on their death bed, "I wish my linen closet had been more organized."

Join me in April and May for an intimate class on learning how to organize both paper and digital photos. Just click through for photo class info.

Fondly,
Darla DeMorrow

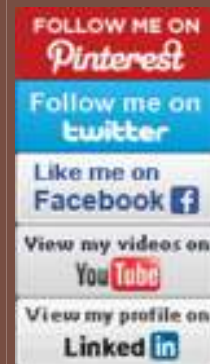

p.s. I'm not in the New York Times yet, but if you subscribe to Money Magazine, check out a quote from yours truly on p34 of the April issue in the article called Spring-Clean Your Finances!
