Procrastinators Unite!

This month is Get Organized (GO) month. It happens every year, but I find myself saying, "Wow, that came quick!" more and more. I know many of you suffer from the same delusions about time that I do. When my mom reads this newsletter, she'll smile that I'll be the one offering support to those who procrastinate. (No Mom, I don't wait until the night before to write my papers anymore.) I've lived it, folks. I'm a recovering procrastinator, and –no- I'm not perfect. So come with me on a virtual journey on Tuesday night, January 20. We'll see what procrastination is, what it isn't, what the experts say, and how you can use a few key strategies to live your life and stop worrying so much about what you are leaving undone.

Start Time: January 20, 2009 at 8 PM eastern time.

If you keep doing what you've always done, you'll keep getting what you've always gotten. Now is the time to try something different.

What exactly is a teleconference?

A teleconference is a convenient way to learn something new or connect with experts without the expense and hassle of travel. All you need is access to a phone line in order to join in. This is not an internet call, and a computer is not required. You can use any phone that you prefer, land line, cell phone or internet phone service. There is no charge for conference call access. However, the access number is a regular number. It is recommended that you use an "unlimited" long distance calling plan to avoid long distance charges from your phone company.

This hour conference call is only $19, and you can sign up by visiting www.HeartWorkOrg.com. As a special thank you to my current and past clients, you can email me directly for your invitation to join this call for free.

Once you register for the call, instructions will be provided to you on how to join the call on January 20, 2009 at 8 PM eastern.

No More Excuses. It's As Easy As...

1. Is this the year to use your dining room table for something more than mail? Or spend more time strategizing with your CPA and less time apologizing for your piles? Or is now the time to just get more restful sleep? Spend an hour with us and get encouraged, refreshed, and fortified to overcome procrastination.
2. It turns out that there is more than one type of procrastination. It helps to be clear about what type of procrastinator you are at different times. This might just help you break through some of your personal challenges.
3. The problem with self-help books is that by the time you get through reading them, you are too tired to implement the changes. What if you could chose just 3 steps to change your habits, and make an immediate impact in your day? I'll help you do just that.

January 20 is just one week from today.

Click Here to enroll in our 2009 GO (Get Organized) teleconference on January 20. As a recovering procrastinator, I can honestly say that you can learn better ways to live. This call will help you with decision making styles & procrastination. Start your year with some new, organized habits. Try on a professional organizer's services for only $19.

If you are a past or current client of HeartWork Organizing, save your money and email me for your personal invitation and directions for accessing the call.

But Wait...There's More!

Attendees of this call will be invited to a follow up call in a month for encouragement and celebration. There's no charge for this additional chance to work with a professional organizer on your procrastination challenges. Your success just makes me smile.
